At least 15 people were killed and 40 wounded when a car bomb exploded yesterday outside à mosque crowded with worshippers in Tripoli.

The explosion happened as Muslims were emerging after attending Friday prayers. One section of the mosque was destroyed and some people were trapped underneath the rubble before rescue workers dug them out.

Reports reaching Beirut said gunmen fired machine guns in he air to clear the way for ambulances carrying the victims to hospital.

In spite of the continuing there have been few attacks on this scale aimed at places of worship. This was the first attack on a Muslim mosque in recent ueeks and there is no indication who was resposible for the bombing.

Tripoli, the second largest city in Lebanon, lies 50 miles north of Beirut. Its population of 500,000 is predominantly Sunni Muslim.

Mugabe curbs press freedom

In the second move against foreign correspondents in a week, the Zimbabwe Government yesterday gazetted emergency powers regulations which provide for censorship of reports on the security situation

The regulation, gazetted under the sweeping Law and

The section is almost identicle down to its wording, to that gazetted in January 1978 by Mr Smith's adminstration to censor reporting on the guerrilla war and which was scrapped by Mr Robert Mugabe's Govern-ment at independence. In some sentences the only change is from "Rhodesia" to "Zim-

The one significant difference is that the 1978 regulations covered the country as a whole, while the new regulations will apply to areas designated by the Minister of Home Affairs. By yesterday afternoon no area had yet been designated and the regulations were consequently > administrators to aim for an overall reduction of staff of between 0.75 per cent and 1.0 per cent by the end of March, next year, but to apply the cuts differentially. Doctors and dentists directly employed were to be included in the "front line" group of staff dealing directly with patients, while bigger cuts were to be applied to the rest.

> The second group, comprising works, maintenance, administrative, clerical, ambulance, and ancillary staffs, was to be cut between 1.35 per cent and 1.8 per cent. The larger reduction for that group is consistent with ministers' beliefs that cuts there can be achieved without affecting services to patients; an idea resisted by many health auth-orities because lack of support staff reduces the time spent on present care by medical staff. Individual staff targets for each region were sent out with the letter. To make the calculations "consistent with ministers' wishes that manpower contribution to the recent cash imit reductions the manpower figures have been reduced by more than the revenue cuts would imply".

Regions that could advance a "reasoned case" by the end of August would be allowed to vary their manpower targets, provided that the outcome was consistent overall with the national aims.

The letter added: "Variations which go further in the desired direction than indicated in the formula-based calculations will be expecially well received).

Mr Hucklesby said yesterday that the letter was the first official communication to link the Chancellor's cash cuts with new manpower targets which represented the first attempt since the health service started to control staff numbers. "Public expectations will have to be reduced because we have a democratically elected Government that prefers to spend money on defence. Hard choices will be inevitable and cuts made to please the financial markets will do untold

Several similar cooperatives which were aided by Mr Benn have already closed.

Meriden has not produced a motorcycle since February, when the workers were laid off. At the end of a five-hour meeting yesterday Mr John Rosamond, the workers' elected chairman announced that the accountants Peat Marwick & Mitchell had been nominated as liquidator for a meeting of shareholders and creditors to be held on August 26.

The cooperative was launched in March, 1975 with the help of a £4.2 loan and a £750,000 grant.

The cooperative was launched in March, 1975 with the maximum possible for each college.

Another factor in Meriden's favour was the general reluc-tance to admit that the once dominant British motor cycle industry - it held 70 per cent of world markets in the 1950s - could not be rescued. Triumph was one of the best known names in the industry and commanded immense loyalty among enthusiasts.

Only two years earlier the then Conservative Government, faced with the imminent collapse of BSA/Triumph, had provided £5m to smooth the lead a single British motor cycle group combining AMC (AJS, Norton and Matchless) and Villiers (two-stroke engines) with BSA and Triumph to form Norton Villiers Triumph.

The fate of 61 men who were them as for other people who served it, according to Mr John Coker. Hampshire's deputy chief probation officer.
He followed what happened to 239 men with life sentences (including the reprieved killers) 1970 and 1974. His conclusion, published in the British Journal of Crimi-nology, challenges the widely accepted belief that long sentences harm prisoners by ruining their capacity to fend for themselves and exist in the outside world. On the contrary, Mr Coker found that the lifers he studied showed no obvious deterioration because of their long years in prison. "In general, after a short period of resettlement, sometimes accompanied by restless-ness, they obtained and kept work and accommodation satisfactorily by their own standards as well as those of the probation service and Home Office - and many married or remarried and made new homes."

Some men actually got better jobs than they had had before.

"Additionally these lifers revealed, generally, a fierce desire for independence and a capacity to manage their own lives competently."

His come-uppence comes in the form of Betty (Julia MaKenzie) a comfort-ably-off widow who is making her first foray into the lonely hearts jungle. Their initial meeting is a delight with the experienced Walter leading the nervous Betty through the unconsequential small-talk and uneasy silences in the manner of a middle-aged Lothario. It is in the later stages of Alan Clews's play, when Walter is forced to propose to Betty, that the plot becomes incredible, but thanks to the two superior performances the play is never less than watchable.

Radio Skin deep

two young women, one accompanied by a man, all fair familiarity.

Scandinavians, I believe, and each girl clutching a baby which colly by the property of the state of the sta only by the most extraordinary chance could have been their own, since one was very black and negroid, the other paler skinned but black-eyed, dark hair and with the typical features of the present-day Latin-American Indian. The babies had to be adopted, taking their first enormous step in the process so graphically described by Andy Price in Motherland (Radio 4, July 30; producer, Sharon Banoff).

Without a doubt these two children would be coming into an environment indescribably more affluent than the one they had just left, and neither was old enough to retain any clear memories of its origins. So surely this adoption was a proper act of mercy, a right thing to be doing. The same could be said, with emphasis, for many of those who contributed to the programme - black, Vietnamese, Hongkong Chinese but, not one of those who skin colour and/or physical type differed much from the broad range of the Northern European norm, could really be said to have been fully absorbed into an adopted country and culture. At best the change had been a success on balance.

One could almost read the future for those two infants in the plane in the covert glances of their fellow passengers whose expressions spoke of admiration and approval, via profound misgiving to barely suppressed hostility. Hearing Motherland confirmed the likelihood of that new five-part drama One prediction: while in their new British families and their circle, these children had found love, support and a high degree of security, outside it was often a different matter. It may or may not be so that we are all brothers and sisters under the skin; in practice the skin is about as far as we go. We react first, and all too often last, to difference, to strangeness and only by an effort of will or in the end through long familiarity do we seem able to mitigate what that first reaction does.

> There is an element of strangeness in the work of Samuel Beckett which always challenges the listener's accept-ance, but hearing Worstward He (Radio 3, Aug 4; director, Ronald Mason) it occurred to

Among my fellow passengers on me that that strangeness may a long flight home recently were here have been somewhat long run of monologues for radio, we were of course for the first time in years without the mesmeric voice of the late Patrick Magee. Norman Rodway was the speaker and a fine performer he is, but his voice does not, probably cannot, suggest that dogged, slightly self-mocking anguish which his predecessor managed by some means to induce in the minds of the listeners, thus persuading them to hare in Beckett's vision.

Less than mesmerised, it struck me that his "On, somehow on... nohow on..." and his "Only one good, gone, gone for good..."
(which I take as meaning that there is both no alternative to, and no point in, proceeding through ife) closely resemble to the point of repetition what he has said to me on a string of previous occasions. So now I wonder if it is because of the magic of the man's name that radio allows him to repeat himself to a degree it would not tolerate from other writers.

On the other hand, I will take almost any amount of the same from Johnny Morris, perhaps because his Around the World in 25 Years (Radio 4, Mondays and Tuesdays) is so blessedly free of any intention to tell me anything about Life, but is ceaselessly interested in the lives of the people he encounters. His description last week of how on their travels through France he and "Tubby Foster" turned up at a château fallen on hard times and reduced to taking guests in was a-masterpieceofobservationandin its way as clear an example as need be of the state of "On, somehow on... nohow on..." Long may Morris circumorbit, but will he...? for "Tubby Foster" (in the ample frame of his producer, Brian Patten) is dead and I am sure. that this enchanting series, like much else that came out of BBC Bristol, owed much to the partnership of performer with that one gifted man.

Oh how I wish that Morris and Patter had had a hand in Capital's Queen Mum, A Loving Profile (Aug 1). Then we might have heard something. But this 83rd birthday celebration, well-made and well-intentioned though it was, somehow missed its subject altogether and left us none the closer to her at the end.

After an ardeous two-r expedition into Greenland's inland ice, a 12-man American team of scientists and aviation experts announced yeaterday that they had located eight Second World War US military aircraft buried under 75ft weather, German wine-growers are guardedly optimistic about this year's harvest. The third part of the series on European wine is written by JAMES HUTCHINSON in Bonn.

The quality of this year's German wines is expected to be the highest since the memorable 1976 vintage. But predictions that it will be the wine of the century are received with scepticism.

As one grower put it: "No sooner do we have a heatwave than people start making that kind of forecast. We can reach a true judgment only when wine

One thing is certain - this year's yield will be much smaller than that of 1982 The wine trade is pleased about this, because last year a wet summer caused the market to be swamped by wine, much of it of inferior quality.

Since the wine regions of Germany are much closer together than those of France they are not subject to wide climatic differences, and therefore the optimistic forecasts hold good for all German wine Rhine-Pfaiz: Produces a

"You should really wait until it's in the glass." The quantity will be about 30 per cent down on last year. The Rheingan is famous for its Riesling, and the area produces about three per cent of Germany's total wine output.

Baden: The vines look promising, both as to quality and quantity, although after the heatwave they could do with a little moisture. "It's too early to make a firm prognosis," a spokesman said. "We don't normally start the harvest until September 20, and a prolonged wet period could put paid to our hopes. I don't think we are going to achieve the 1976 standard."

Reagan's backyard blunder

New York Unless he is stopped by Congress - and only Congress and the force of public opinion can stop him - Ronald Reagan could plunge this country into the most unwanted, unconscionable, unnecessary and unwinnable war in its history, not excepting Vietnam.

Reagan sees the trouble in Central America as coming from outside the area, as revolution exported from the Soviet Union and Cuba. His response is to dispatch huge naval and air armadas to the waters off the Nicaraguan coasts and thousands of American troops to the ranchlands and jungles of neighbouring Honduras.

If the revolutionaries in Nicaragua and the guerrillas in El Salvador whom they support do not capitulate before this display of American might - as they almost certainly will not - Reagan will have left himself little choice between reversing his Central America policy and moving in with American guns, planes and men.

Since the premises of Reagan's policy are wrong, his actions stemming from that policy are wrong, Latin America's revolutions, including those of Mexico, Cuba, El Salvador and Nicaragua, are homegrown, not exported from anywhere else. The undoubted communist influence on these revolutions - always strong and always inevitable - cannot be nullified by external military force, as even Reagan should have learned from the Bay of Pigs and the events

These revolutions and revolutionaries can be a threat to our security (a minor one at that) only if we force them completely into the Soviet corner and isolate them there. The Russians, their agents and their disciples cannot do as much harm to the long-term interests of the United States as by John B. Oakes we are doing to ourselves by imitating them in trying to impose our style of democracy on people who may be totally unready or asuited for it.

Because of the brutal purge of Central American experts as soon as he took office, Reagan had no one around to tell him that the Sandinista arms build-up in Nicaragua might just possibly not have been impelled by the desire to conquer all the rest of Central America for Castro and Marx. It might have stemmed from genuine fear, founded on history, of direct American military intervention. Fantastic as that may have seemed to Reagan at the time, it doesn't seem so fantastic today - certainly no more fantastic than what he is doing right now to Honduras.

He is remilitarizing this pathetically poor and helpless country just as it is emerging from years of military rule. He is undermining its fragile democracy and indirectly inciting open warfare between Honduras and its neighbours. He is using Honduras not only as a springboard for forces opposed to the Nicaraguan regime but also as a training ground - on the cheap - for Salvadoran government troops.

Perhaps no one in the Reagan entourage knew that the last Central American war - a brief but savage one just a few years ago - was between El Salvador and Honduras. Historically, the two countries have had an unfriendly relationship. The presence of Salvadoran troops on Honduran soil is a prescription for trouble - for which Reagan again will have to bear the responsibility.

The record in Guatemala is no better. Guerrilla warfare has been smouldering there for at least 20 years. Even less than El Salvador, less than Nicaragua, did Guatemala need Castro or Marx or communist propaganda to pit rich against poor, oligarchy against peasantry, army against guerrillas. While gross national product has gone up, the living standard of 80 per cent of the population has gone down as large-scale agriculture has pushed the Indian peasants into ever less fertile and ever less productive areas in which to grow their own scanty food.

Guatemala's born-again president, who was catapulted into power after a postelection coup last year, may be somewhat less bloodthirsty than his infamous predecessors, but they at least did not have the temerity to claim, as he does, that they were in direct personal contact with the Almighty. Because President Efrain Rios Montt talks to God and not Marx, the Reagan administration can think of nothing better to do with American power and money than to resume the military support that was cut off several years ago because of Guatemala's abominable human rights record. American military supplies have no purpose in Guatemala but continued repression of the Guatemalan people, particularly its large Indian segment.

The growing military involvement of the United States in Nicaragua, Honduras and Guatemala - as well as in El Salvador - may stimulate Reagan's ego and self-image as standing up to communism, but it is painfully clear that it does nothing to enhance our national security or the welfare of the people of Central America.

Plotting to save the good old British vegetable

Patricia Clough reports growing unrest over EEC policy

If you have taken over an old kitchen garden or allotment, think twice before pulling up those odd. brown-leaved lettuces or those curious beans with pods pointing upwards. When tidying the garden shed, pause before throwing away any old, faded seed packets. You may be destroying the last examples of some ancient British vegetable. condemning it to oblivion for ever.

This fate is threatening many old vegetables, grown for centuries in Britain's gardens and fields, the seeds handed down through genera-tions, passed on to neighbours or bought in local markets. Many were restricted to small areas where they grew well, sometimes to one village or even only one plot.

Now they face extinction, the victims of standardization measures throughout the EEC which, in Britain, can mean fines of up to £1,000 for anyone who sells their

It may already be too late for the Durham miners' leek, which helped to keep its growers going through the grim days of the depression. Mr dant at the Northern Horticultural Society's headquarters at Harlow Car, near Harrogate, is looking for survivors but fears it has died out.

There is the Martock bean, cultivated since Cistercian monks started vegetable breeding in Britain in the 12th century, which survives in the Somerset village of Martock. Even older is the Ragged Jack, a course, pinkish variety of kale believed to have been brought to Britain by the Romans.

The old bean and pea varieties which dried well and provided Britons with a valuable source of protein for winter are vanishing, leaving the field to the kind that freeze well. Such is the Carlin pea, bred since Elizabethan times and common until the Second World War, and the soldier bean, so called because of a brown soldier-like figure on the white husk. Both are now rare. "If varieties like this go we are losing a unique genetic resource", Mr Swindells says. "Once it has gone you can't breed it back again." It is not really the EEC's fault. Like several other countries, Britain had been sorting out its seed regulations in the 1960s, but after it joined the EEC these were tightened up still further to suit Community regulations. More than 1,000 names were dropped and others are being weeded out as time passes. There is now an official EEC list of permitted varieties, which is an amalgam of the ten official national lists.

The point of the lists was to create order among much confusion. Some varieties were called by different names in different parts of EEC countries. Conversely, the same names were being applied to several varieties that were in fact quite different. Government officials maintain that they simply threw out names, and that gardeners looking for a certain variety would find it under another name. But critics maintain that many actual varieties were dropped in the process.

One uncalculated side effect of the

One uncalculated side effect of the lists was to encourage the popular, commercially profitable, market-gardening varieties at the expense of the small, old-fashioned or local varieties planted by the amateur gardener. Any seedsman who wants to register a new variety has to pay about £600 for testing and another £80 a year for registration, which he can afford only if he is sure it will well - that is, at least 5,000 seli dackets. Anvone can teristet an ok variety, but they must be prepared to produce it on a suitable scale, and they do not get royalties.

As a result, the old-fashioned. space-saving amateur gardeners' pea, which grows to around five or six feet, is giving way to shorter, bushier versions more easily harvested by the commercial market gardener. Brussels sprouts plants which keep the housewife supplied over several weeks are disappearing in favour of those which produce sprouts all at once for mechanical

Varieties on the lists must be "distinct" and "stable", which suits the modern, high-yield, F.1 hybrid varieties which come up virtually identical, but not the primitive oldfashioned vegetables whose offspring are as different as the children in any family. The old-fashioned grower has smaller yields, but he could be reasonably sure that at least some would survive disease, a hard winter or drought. They might be less attractive, smaller and tougher than modern types but, their growers swear, they taste so much

However, in the vegetables' moment of peril, there are defenders to the rescue. First among these is Lawrence D. Hills, director of the Henry Doubleday Research Associa-tion at Bocking, near Braintree in Essex. He has founded a seed library from which members can borrow unlisted seeds, replacing them when the plants reproduce their own.

Members can become "seed guardians", raising and caring for threatened varieties.

Mr Hills is collecting seeds from Spain and Portugal in preparation for those countries' entry into the EEC, foreseeing that their richness of varieties will dwindle in the same way as Britain's. He is looking for a Greek correspondent who will obtain seeds of vegetables cultivated for centuries by the monks at Mount Athos monastery.

Thanks partly to his efforts, a gene bank has been set up with funds from Oxfam at the National Vegetable Research Station at Wellesbourne, near Stratford-on-Avon. In the two and a half years since it was founded, it has collected 4,700 different kinds of seeds - the target is 20,000 - which are preserved at minus 25 degrees C.

Like Mr Hills, the research station encourages gardeners to send in seeds of little-known varieties or any old seed packets they may find. The bank can preserve a variety for centuries - if it gets the seeds in time. "If they do not come to us many are likely to die out", a spokesman said.

The gene bank is part of a worldwide network which is growing up amid growing concern at the loss of genetic diversity. The seeds pre-served may hold qualities such as disease resistance, hardiness or nutritional values which may be valuable for future generations.

Mr Derek Enright, Member of the European Parliament for Leeds, has extracted from Mr Poul Dalsager, the EEC Agriculture Commissioner, an assurance that the EEC will treat the problems of the small gardener sympathetically. Some of his constituents are worried about the future of the Leeds lettuce, a small local variety.

Many old vegetables can be seen, and sometimes even tasted, at five vegetable sanctuaries. One is at Mr Hills' establishment near Braintree, another at Harlow Car. The others are at Quarry Bank Mill, Styal, near Wilmslow, Cheshire, which grows no plant developed later than 1900, Dean's Court, Wimborne, Dorset, which has an old walled kitchen garden, and in the collection of historic vegetables, including the Martock bean, at the Bishop's Palace, Wells, Somerset.

Longer-term projects may include about 700 species, with obvious

potential for many developing countries with or without pandas.

I pass their observations to the Barnet Borough Council, but they, like the sons of fun they are, insist that their expert is more expert than the Men o' the Trees. In every other Eden beyond this sceptred Isle there is a serpent, and sometimes two: "Use a walking stick in snakeinfested areas - they might attack the stick rather than you - and carry a torch at night".

There is an old, laborious schoolboy joke about "enjoying the trip" which is sometimes produced when someone falls over. Micro-pharm Ltd, the publishers of Have a Good Trip! seem to have borrowed from its humour, planting instruc-tional banana skins along the routes of all our holiday ambitions. Although representing private enter-prise, the inexpensive booklet (50p, 23 passport-sized pages) includes a contribution from the Health Education Council and has their endorsement.

Smokers and drinkers will find this encouraging. "Have a good trip" may signify but a faint flicker of energy diverted from the HEC's attention to their habits, but it's nice attention to their habits, but it's nice to have the no-no's passed around a bit. This catalogue of recreational negatives even tells you when to clock-in and out of sunbathing. "For the first few days, you should not sunbathe in northern Europe between 11.00 am and 3.00 pm or in places near the equator between 10.00 am and 4.00 pm. Never sunbathe between 12.00 and 2.00 pm unless you want to be sunburnt."

As we know from the song, it's advice which contradicts a tradition. In fact, worthy, chirpy little works of this nature encourage paralysis of our legendary spirit of adventure; not to mention the new disease of victimology. British tourists, I'm are singularly unhelpful in this area. They offer only one curt reference: "The chances of being bitten by a cation tablets and first-aid kits. It was not always thus. I hope it isn't quite medical nonsense to suggest that if you're a regular traveller, then high level of protection can be counterproductive. After years of travelling in Europe it would never occur to me to avoid the local tap water and this nonchalance, I believe, has now accustomed my system to minor, non-British water-borne bugs.

Then there's insurance. I wish I. had a pound for every pound I've spent on travel insurance. At one time I held the superstitious belief that a package policy possessed the properties of a magic amulet, and that if you didn't take out insurance, some divine and vengeful broker-inthe-sky would send flood, plague, earthquake and defective deck chairs to smite you down.

Which brings me to a final complaint about Have a Good Trip.

Panda to everyone's taste

The giant panda, when you consider it carefully, is really a useless creature with little more than its deceptively charming appearance to commend it. Even the most passionate conservationists recognize that the millions of pounds squandered annually on attempts to increase its numbers could be far more profitably spent on other species, some of which, if not so vacuously cuddlesome, are at least edible or intelligent.
In public relations terms, however, the beast is nothing if not big business. Apart possibly from David Bellamy, it is all that millions of people know about conservation and all they need to know. Its stylized teddy-bear features are ubiquitous as the emblem of the World Wildlife Fund; it is one of China's most sought-after exports, and its potency as a fund-raiser and focus of zoological research ultimately demolishes the arguments of those who would dismiss it as an evolutionary dead end. Apart from its notorious sexual and thus procreative inefficiency, the giant panda's general unfitness for survival is programmed into the ludicrously specialized habitat it requires. It feeds, for example, primarily on a few species of bamboo.

Those species, in an uncanny parallelism to the animal they support, have, over millennia, evolved a complicated and slow reproductive method: they flower on average every 80 years and then die off for several years before regener-ating. The result is famine. One such famine, in the 1970s, killed 138 pandas, more than one tenth of the estimated panda population in Such famines are localized - not all species of bamboo burst into flower at once all over China - and in the past have been easily overcome by the pandas themselves. It was simply a matter of shifting their lazy butts to the nearest hillside. In a fairly small reserve ual ambitions of millions of voters have been fully reflected in public policy. The years since 1979 have seen a plethora of new measures and decisions aimed at promoting owner-occupation and aiding house buyers. The right to buy council homes will swell the number of new mortgages by some 200,000 to around million this year and nearly double the number of first-time buyers. This year alone, the limit on tax relief on interest has been raised to mortgages up to £30,000; the Finance Act has opened the wholesale money markets to the building societies; and a court decision will allow hem to issue index-linked nortgages at low nominal interest rates for the first time.

It is doubtful if so strong common and laudable a domstic ambition needs so many irtificial stimulants in order to lourish; especially those that ause dubious distortions in the nousing and financial markets.

Popular as such measures indoubtedly are, their success iraws yet more of the country's savings into the housing market at the expense of productive business. Informed estimates suggest that an extra £15 billion will flood into new house mortgages this year, more than the increase in bank credit to the rest of the economy, even at a time of business recovery.

Of more immediate concern, the current housing boom, and the building societies' determination to minimize rationing by queue, threaten to keep the money supply well above target, to encourage the sort of financial instability that undermined ecovery prior to the oil crisis in 1973, and to heighten the ikelihood of higher interest rates for the economy as a whole.

After two slack years the were, on some estimates, rising at an annual rate of about 13 per cent, drawing in more would-be buyers anxious not to miss out. The building societies drew on their reserves to meet demand but, given strong competition in stabilized matters, helping both to slow the rise in prices and funds. But this has only been achieved at a price. Building society deposits are included in wider measures of the money supply and these were leading the general breaking of monetary targets before the effects of the latest increase in deposits. These wider money measures must take on ever greater significance as it becomes clear that many wealthier borrowers, egged on by private financial advisers, are abusing mortgage tax relief to borrow more than they need on changing houses to pay incidental bills, spend in the shops, or invest in other financial assets.

More directly, the extra deposits must come from somewhere. In this case, the building societies are competing heavily with banks and the Government for savings. Competition with banks has now gone beyond the high street into the money markets, where the societies hope to raise £4 billion in certificates of deposit, a market of only £11 billion, hitherto dominated by the banks. There is plenty of money in wholesale markets at this time of year, but come the autumn, competition is bound to increase bank costs. adding pressure to raise interest rates at a time when industry is anxious to avoid any such jolt.

This is no criticism of the building societies. They are doing their job within the rules set by public policy. Their role has been increased by the transfer of council house finance to the private sector. And their task has been made harder by the erratic behaviour of banks, which leapt in to seize more than a third of the mortgage market housing market suddenly took on easy terms last year, then off earlier this year. House prices drew back, leaving the building societies struggling to fill the gap and live with the effects of last year's competition on lending

The effects remain. The early stages of recovery are normally money-intensive and frequently drawn up with that in mind.

Home ownership has long been the savings market could not feature the housing market high among British priorities. In avoid queues forming. The which helps spread demand to this sphere, at least, the individ-recent 114 per cent rise in their other sectors of the economy. It borrowing rates seems to have is possible to allow for this by adjusting money targets, but as the 1972-73 period showed, it is double the monthly inflow of hard to return to a more normal course of money growth without disruptive rises in interest rates. The financial cycle has its own dynamic which does not wait on economic policies.

> The way to ease these problems is to reconsider public policies towards housing incentives. It has long been realized that, within the limits set by alternative land use, the price of houses is largely determined by people's ability to pay for them. In the long run, tax reliefs are merely soaked up in higher prices, leaving the next round of buyers no better off. Mortgage relief on the extra £5,000 has already produced some signs of higher than avarage price increases at the upper end of the housing market. Until this happened, there was a tacit understanding that inflation would whittle away tax relief in a relatively painless manner. It would be wholly impractical to abolish tax reliefs overnight, but reasonable by annual instalments over a period. This would not merely ease growing finan-cial pressures. It would when completed make possible a 21/2 pence cut in the standard rate of income tax and avoid both crosssubsidies and abuses of the

> Today, we are still moving in the opposite direction. It is unjust, for instance, that an increase in the mortgage rate by clipping public revenue should require tax increases, cuts in public services, or sales of more shares in British Petroleum. If inflation-linked mortgages make any impact, we shall see a further comparative rise in low-price housing to destroy lasting benefits to first-time buyers and needlessly draw more savings into housing. The time has surely come when the integral importance of housing in the financial system should be recognized and public policies to encourage home ownership

To judge by their surroundings, they must be rather less than a foot tall. But they seem giants beside their subjects and retinues, who creep through every part of the undergrowth, like insects industriously reducing the discoloured leaves and tendrils to decayed matter that will nourish fresh tangles, of disordered abundance. Every inch of the painting's surface is congested with a microscopic activity, so intense that it seems to enervate and almost engulf the main figures: in a moment the fronds of Solomon's Seal threaten to clasp them like tentacles and draw them down into the compost.

It is not a world that one would wish to wake up and find oneself trapped in. The artist, the Victorian painter Richard Dadd. was trapped for 40 years in a world of obsessive delusions that the atmosphere of the painting communicates haunting impressions of As a young man he murdered his father in a fit of insanity, and he spent the rest of his life in mental hospitals, continuing to work, industriously and in almost total critical committee which reviews export still be missed then.

> The anonymous buyer is foreign, and the Government has refused an export licence. This gives British interests until November to match the bid and keep the picture in a public collection here. But the freakishly high price has made galleries slow to come forward to raise the money, and in the current economic climate, with so many other calls on their resources, they can scarcely be blamed.

> In our recent correspondence about the painting, one reader complained not unreasonably that whenever a work of art is threatened with export a chorus of protest goes up as if it was at risk of falling into the clutches of barbarians. There is indeed an insularity about some campaigns to retain works having no special links with this country, by artists already well represented here. There is a general cultural case for the diffusion of major works and there are commercial and libertarian aguments for not interfering unduly with the market.

But compared to the scale of the outflow the chorus does not but it is safe to predict that if the go up so very often. The picture does leave Britain it will licences receives thousands of applications a year, and delays approval in only a handful of cases in all categories - only nine times last year. It only imposes its temporary bar in cases of exceptional significance from the aesthetic or scholarly points of view, or because of close connexions with British history or national life.

"Oberon and Titania" fully deserves to qualify on at least two of these three counts. It is the second finest example of the rare work of an artist who, apart from the intrinsic quality of his work, is a figure of exceptional psychological interest, in illustrating the theme of the interplay between genius and insanity in nineteenth and twentieth century art. The painting is also of some significance as a monument to Victorian society's treatment of the mentally ill, which our own age has no occasion to be condescending about.

There is no doubt that it deserves to qualify: but does it deserve to qualify at the price? Any public collection with foresight could have had it for £7,000 in 1964 (even in real terms, less than a tenth of this year's price). But in 1964 £7,000 seemed decidedly steep. No one can say whether £550,000 will seem steep or modest when another 20 years have passed:

From the Director of Social Services housing and no more than 7 per cent of Warwickshire County Council

Sir, May I enlist your assistance to dissuade some of our most distinguished politicians from referring to elderly people as a burden on the working population.

Apart from the gratuitous offence to a section of the community who, by definition, have done more than the rest of us to create our national wealth and are therefore entitled to share in it, the basis for these attacks is ill-informed.

For instance, the number of people over the age of retirement has actually been falling for some time and while the number of people in the very oldest age groups continues to increase, the number of people over the age of 75 years will reach its maximum in 1991 and then continue steady until the end of the

The number of people who are even older will continue to rise, although this is more than compensated for by the decrease in the "young elderly" group and the numbers involved are so small that they hardly constitute a threat to the national economy.

Furthermore, far from being unduly burdened by the number of dependants, both young and old, there has never been a time when the ratio of people of working age has been so high. It is hardly the fault of the children or the old people if we cannot better manage our affairs to ensure that more of the 'workers" are actually in employment.

Far from being a burden on health and social services, the facts are that over 90 per cent of elderly people live and die in their own homes, making no more than marginal extra demands on their general practitioners, who receive an extra allowance for their trouble. It is only a small minority who seek or nee specialist care in hospital or an old people's home or even sheltered

Typhoid in Kos

From Dr Alex Sakula Sir. It is ironic that the outbreak of typhoid which is currently hitting the headlines should have centred on Kos, an Acgean island which, from ancient times, has been associated with the promotion of health and healing.

Kos was famous throughout the ancient world for its Asklepicion, where the cult of Asklepios, the Greek god of healing, flourished for many centuries. Moreover, it was in Kos that, in the fifth century BC, Hippocrates, the father of modern medicine was born.

Because of its climate and natural beauty Kos has in recent years become a popular holiday resort, but it is also a mecca for pilgrims - both medical and others - who visit the ruined Asklepicion and also linger under the great plane tree, the descendant of the original under which Hippocrates practised and taught medicine 25 centuries ago. I doubt the desirability of trying to prevent the export of the trapping bought by a Continental dealer, for it is no Iron Age "Contradiction. Oberon and Titania." Export would create no dangerous precedent, for British antiquities have long been sold abroad, as diversely as to Australia, California and Canada. Nor do I see why they should not be. By using these techniques we have doubled our yield in the past ten years. We had to do this to stay in business, as in the latter half of the 1970s prices so lagged behind costs that it was only by increasing yield that we were able to keep going. Nineteen eighty-two reversed this trend, however, and we have been able to re-equip properly for the first time in eight years in preparation for a leaner future. There is an alternative, which is to remove the support from agriculture and allow world markets to operate. We should then be competing with the vast American prairie system of low input and low output farming. The ensuing loss of hedgerows would only be equalled by the loss of jobs.

this to include the provision of Planning controls might prevent the former, if they were imple-mented quickly enough, but it would be the end of the British cereal farmer. We should return to the position of the 1930s, when most of our food was imported and much land would be left derelict. The poppies would flourish once more and Mr Hart would be happy until one day he found there was no bread in the shops.

Most farmers are conscious of the need to balance conservation with production, but there is a danger that if the present outcry continues unabated they may be driven to desperate measures to protect their position. The situation described as the norm by Mr Hart could well become a reality, in which case, heaven help us!

There are two sides to this question, therefore, and both need to be heard if we are to maintain food production without destroying the countryside.

Yours faithfully, MICHAEL SAUNDERS WATSON Rockingham Castle, Market Harborough, Leicestershire.

From Mr W. F. de Salis Sir. David Hart's shrill diatribe (feature, August 2) on the influence of the farming lobby misses the point because he fails to record the views of the general public. A recent public opinion poll conducted by the British Market Research Bureau showed that 75 per cent of people believe that farmers and landowners do a good job looking after the countryside.

Despite changes in farming methods, the public still rank the landscape and scenery top of their list in the benefits which people get from the countryside. They would not have done this if farmers and landowners had ruined the country-

There is, of course, a need for major changes in the common agricultural policy. Hopefully British politicians will work towards changes which will ensure the continuing prosperity of British agriculture. British food can provide more employment between farmgate and the housewife's shopping basket than can food imported from our European neighbours.

It is surely time that political commentators in Britain changed their craft from one of knocking success stories to one which applauds them. Yours faithfully,

Mole among hounds

From the Chairman of the British Field Sports Society

Sir. On August 2 The Times gave prominence ("Spectrum") to a report about a man who served a nine-month prison sentence for desecrating the grave of the legend-ary huntsman, John Peel, and who has been following hunts with a camera to record their activities on behalf of the League Against Cruel Sports. When Peel's grave was vandalised his bones and those of his relatives were scattered around the church precincts and an obscene message left behind.

That those who direct the League Against Cruel Sports can give credit to such a man or to such trickery may be no surprise to the many country people who suffer from their activities but it must be asked whether bona fide sympathisers can still believe in this organisation. Mr Huskisson/Wright/Wilkins - or whatever his current cover name may be - has at least done a public service by demonstrating the fact. Hunts are open to all comers and it is absurd to say they have been infiltrated". People who follow the hounds are accepted in good faith. Country sportsmen have nothing to hide and if those responsible offend against the accepted code of conduct they may expect to suffer for it. If their opponents have a case at law

why do they not bring it instead of parading such duplicity? The Director of the League Against Cruel Sports was reported yesterday (August 3), again in The Times, as ready to re-employ Mr Huskisson whom he had previously referred to as "the best undercover agent we've ever had".

In an overwhelmingly urban society country sportsmen must face

First-class returns

From Mr G. C. W. Beazley Sir. First-class day-return tickets withdrawn by British Rail will be of the choice of first-class travel at peak hours and cannot buy firstclass day returns at off-peak times when the main line service calls at Bedford and Luton and the trains are running at less than 50 per cent seat occupancy.

We fear total withdrawal of firstclass accommodation by stealth from London suburban and provincial secondary services. As representatives of the traveller the transport users' consultative committees will challenge BR's policy on this issue and seek implementation of reinstatement of first-class day returns nationally and first-class accommodation on the "Bed-Pan" line. Entry to Bar

From Sir Frederick Lawton Sir, Your summary (July 29) of Mr Walter Merricks's article in a recent issue of the New Law Journal associated the Senate of the Inns of Court with a proposal which I put before the Advisory Committee on Legal Education at its last meeting.

The Bar is not, and in my professional lifetime has never been, concerned to exclude anyone with the wrong background, the wrong accents or the wrong faces; but it may want to exclude those who have the wrong attitudes to the law, the courts and chents.

What the Bar is concerned with is training those who have the right qualities for practice. Training the task of deciding how to select the applicants for entry who have the best chance of succeeding in a profession which gives big rewards to the few who succeed and little to the majority who do not. The universities and polytechnics will probably have to help with the selection of entrants. My proposal was that the help might best be given in a standard form of report which commented on an applicant's qualities which were relevant to practice. Academic ability is one quality but many outstanding examinees fail in practice whilst others who scraped through their examinations become leaders of their profession.

What does matter is an ability to express oneself well, both orally and in writing. Accents are irrelevant. Many accents are used by harristers. Lord Denning's Hampshire burr and the late Mr Justice Swift's Lancasfacilities are limited. The Senate has trian vowels were no handicap to them. An entrant to the profession who cannot get on with the other members of his chambers or establish a rapport with his clients is likely to fail - and those who come from wealthy and influential backgrounds often have difficulty in this respect

Somehow those responsible for selecting entrants to the School of Law will have to identify those with the requisite qualities. They are to be found in students from varying social and financial backgrounds. It is a myth that the Bar is recruited from the moneyed classes. I did not come from them, nor did many of my friends at the Bar and on the Bench.

A playwright's work may be said to be one stage removed from real life, its interpretation two stages and a museum of interpretations three. Faced with the heavy cost of conserving the buildings and artefacts of our true past, thinking persons must surely accord a very low priority to the preservation of theatrical ephemera.

Council out of touch, Runcie says

Vancouver (Reuter) - A wide gap exists between the World Council of Churches and "ordinary Christians in the pew", the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, said

Average church members more concerned with personal faith and morals than with the council's high-level moves for religious unity or programmes for social change, he told Reter on Thursday.

Dr Runcie, who is in Vancouver at the head of the Church of England's delegation to the council's governing assembly, said the council's occasionally controversial ecumenical group was seen as out of touch by the average churchgoer. There was "less coolness" about the Anglican Church taking part in the council than two years ago, but the archbishop noted that he would have to give an account of the council's assembly actions when the Church of England's synod meets in November. Representatives from about 300 Protestant. Orthodox and Anglican churches with about 400 million members are attending the asembly, which ends on August 10.

Dr Runcie said it rmained to be seen whether the will of the 800 delegates to the assembly would be carried out during the 18-day meeting or whether the council pronouncements and programmes would merely be a "predetermined" wanted.

It would be interesting to see how far the real spirit of the assembly comes through Noting that the assembly was the first he had attended, Dr Runcie said he was pleased that there seemed to be a greater emphasis on worship and theology as a counter balance to the council's widely publicized identification with radcal social activism. He said the council's more controversial actions and statements had "sometimes appeared to be the only thing the world council

At Cambridge he orders, first published in 1938, qualified with 1st Class Honours in the Natural Science leading clinical endocrinologist. Tripos and this early interest in science served him well for the whole of his professional life. He was a boxing Blue and captain of boxing.

While at the London Hospital Simpson distinguished himself by publishing a number of which were the first account of the viral actiology of psittacosis lung (in 1929) in which he clearly pointed out the importance of particle inhalation as a probable actiological factor and most interesting account of secondary pellagra.

Under the auspices of the London Hospital Simpson went to the Mayo Clinic (USA) where his interest in hormones and endocrinology can be said to have begun. These were exciting days because the hormones of the pituitary and adrenal gland and of the ovaries and testes were first being isolated and Returning to London he quickly established himself as an endocrinologist and wrote prolifically about the treatment of Addison's disease, Cushing's disease, diseases of the pituitary gland, the causes of hirsuitism in women and the effects of having two diseases, namely diabetes and Addison's disease simultaneously.

One of his greatest interests was in obesity and the description he gave of this disease in childhood remains a classic even today. With great perception he pointed out in lectures and repeated clinical demonstrations at the Royal Society of Medicine that obesity should not be equated simply with gluttony, and he always maintained that the major cause of obesity was an imbalance of hormones and a complex metabolic problem, an attitude that accords with modern thought today.

Simpson's contribution to the subject of clinical endocrinology was made possible not only by his years at the Mayo Clinic, but by spending three research years at the Lister Institute in London working with Korenchevsky on daughter. Georgina.

Sally Adams writes:

NOTEBOOK

Rubber prices have bounded up over the last six months after two years of depression if they continue at the present rate they could, within weeks, reach the point at which the rubber buffer stock manager must sell. How will the market American Depository receipts, previously an obscure technicality, sprang to prominence during the Sotheby affair. In recent weeks American investors have acquired sizable stakes in blue chip British companies. But the speed at which these stakes have increased has posed problems for Morgan Guaranty, the Inventor of ADRs. In the wake of Henderson administration another investment group has restructured. Attantic Assets is capitalizing holdings in Ivory & Sime and Personal Asset. The directors realize some of their holdings, but the discount is attractive to other sharehalders.

City Editor's Comment

The long, hard road to Wytch Farm

If Mrs Thatcher's first four years taught this Government anything about privatization, it was surely that converting simple manifesto promises into reality is a terribly frustrating, time-comsuming and complicated business.

Nowhere has the task proved more sisyphean than with the Government's plans to sell off the British Gas corporation's 50 per cent stake in Wytch Farm. the country's largest onshore oil field.

It is now more than two years since Mr David Howell, then Secretary of State for Energy, first announced the Government's intention to sell the asset. Two energy secretaries later, the process has still not been completed, notwithstanding the fact that the department's original deadline for completing the disposal was the end of the 1981/2 financial year (i.e. 16 and a bit months ago). A buyer has been found in the form of the Dorset Group, a consortium of five independent British oil companies, and the terms of the sale have, after protracted negotiations, finally been approved (by the Government at least, if not by the gas corporation. But once again, the latest deadline for tying up the sale -the middle of last month has come and gone. The betting is that it will be several weeks before the final legal and contractual issues have been settled, and Wytch Farm moves into the private sector. It is ironic that the Government's original decision to sell the asset by auction to the oil industry, rather than issue shares to the public, was taken in the belief that it would enable the whole process to be wrapped up more quickly. This calculation has proved to be startingly misguided. Add to this the fact that

Gontran Goulden boards a packet ship for a Norwegian coastal cruise

Weaving around the Arctic's rocky fjords on the decks of the Midnight Sun man was getting on a bit bit seedy a sea voyage was just the thing. Mind ou. I don't think he had ever been further than Margate in one of those old paddle-steamers, but he was right in Sea voyages, apart from cruises, are not easy to find these days, and if I hadn't met a Hebridean deep-sea diver in Charing Cross Hospital mights never have heard of the Norwegian Coasial Service.

Now in its nineticth year it operates daily between Bergen on the west coast and Kirkenes in the far north, a distance of about 1,200 miles, of which half is within the Arctic Circle. The round trip takes [] days and the ship makes 34 calls in each direction, serving as a long-distance bus and carrying mail. trozen fish and general freight between mainland ports and off-shore islands.

The attraction for the discerning tourist is that he can take a round trip mainly in sheltered waters amid the superb scenery of the fjords, without all the brouhaha of a eruise.

For the seadog, who loves to arrive in a strange harbour and appreciates skilful pilotage and the niceties of coming alongside in all weathers, this is a special new and fascinating experience.

Eleven ships maintain the service. We took one of the newest and largest, the Midnatsoi under the command of Captain Bard Edvarsen. She is odd to look at, but ships have been getting uglier since they started putting engines in them. Of all-welded construction, she has widely flared bows, slab sides and her upper works are pushed right forward. Above her rail she has four decks surmounted by a "greenhouse" giving an excellent all-round

The after deck is arranged for containers, with space for 40 cars in a hangar beneath. A large crane occupies the middle of this deck, pushing the single rectangular funnel to one side: logical but not pretty. The engines are in the stern under the hanger. The Midnatsol being a very manoeuvrable "high technology" ship, every-thing is controlled from the bridge, a quiet place where an officer in an armchair, wearing bedroom slippers, sits surrounded by controls, knobs and dials, very much like the flight Jeck of an aircraft.

The passenger accommoda-tion is excellent. Interior design My uncle Hubert used to is first class, and the standard cabins, with shower, basin and lavatory are roomy for one, reasonable for two, and can take three. Public rooms are comfortably furnished, and a lift makes life easier for the oldies. In the dining room excellent fish is plentiful and well served.

An almost continuous chain of skerries - flat-topped rocks - form a breakwater along the west coast of Norway, upon which the rollers of the North Sea pound with a constant roar. become small islands to which buildings cling like limpets. Then come the larger islands in all shapes and sizes. Our route runs between them and the fjord-indented mainland.

stantly, offering little repose to those who want to see everything. We head for a narrow channel between two islands whose slopes plunge straight into the water. The texture of the rocks varies greatly - some are smooth and benign, others harsh and terrifying in their roughness. The view opens out into a wide fjord with distant mountains, then closes again to form another narrow channel, flanked by Bath bun shaped islands where scattered houses crouch in sheltered bays.

In April most low peaks have an icing sugar dusting of snow, which lying more thickly in treat, and for land-lubbers, a crevices creates a striped black and white effect. Colours generally are sombre - grey, black and brown in varied shades depending on the light. Later everything will be green with birch trees. Always when the view opens out there is a distant panorama of jagged and smooth white mountains where the shadows are blue. In the evening the white snows change to pink in the setting sun.

The scenery in bright sunlight it shone almost all the time is one of immense grandeur which a cloud can turn in an instant to one of menace and foreboding accentuated, per-haps, by the bright red sail of a fishing boat.

Often when the mountain slopes flatten before entering the water there are timber houses, very neat and prim, and traditionally painted in all the pale colours of the rainbow. Fishermen's houses stand on piles at the water's edge with a moored fishing boat alongside.

A red mail van waits, and two men arrive to take the warps. The Midnatsol is laid several fork-lift trucks hurtle to unload the mail and merchandisc. Goods for loading are waiting in stacks. Loading and unloading goes on simul-taneously and at top speed, the trucks avoiding each other like seagulls on the wing.

A loudspeaker warms that the ship is about to leave. The ramp and gangway are hauled up. warps cast off, one blast on the hooter and we are away. The operation may have taken 20 minutes or two hours, but we are always on time.

Few towns look their best from the docks. Trondheim, Norway's third largest city, is no exception. Warehouses, lorry parks, marshalling yards and general mess keep the ship at arm's length. It is only in the small towns that the quays are close to the centre, and even there, brand new storehouses are replacing the handsome old timber buildings. However we alongside, and the moment she did see some conservation and is moored the quay comes to preservation of wooden build-lowered from her side and Tromso, where, in sharp contrast, a huge high-level concrete bridge spans the fjord.

The North Cape was named by the British explorer Richard Chancellor in 1553, and Admiral Lord Fraser took it as histitle after the Second World War. It is very large and intimidating; black, precipitous, potentially storm-swept and a thousand feet high. We rounded it slowly and with proper

Many ports were virtually obliterated during the war. Most, like Hammerfest, the world's northernmost town, were rebuilt without imagination. Kirkenes, the turning point of our voyage, where magentite is mined, is another.

As we steam further north the weather has become noticeably colder, though no less brilliant. At Kirkenes a thin film of ice covers the water, with deep snow ashore.

There is however one exception to this lack of imagination Kristiansund, an internal life. An enormous ramp is ings going on, particularly in harbour surrounded by fine timber buildings all painted white or pale green, pink, grey or brown. Although grievously damaged, the town has been rebuilt in the traditional way. The real architecture of the fjords is in the waterside groups of buildings and an occasional church. The most exciting part of the whole voyage was the homeward passage from Harstad to Svolvaer in the Lofotens islands. Channels were narrower, banks steeper, precipices more forbidding and mountains more jagged. It was a microcosm of the whole trip which included two of the most interesting harbours and a terrible pong of

The Frames' coach was last year's model: broken clock, thick red tartan seats and fans that could not cope with the freak London heat The driver was unsure of the route and needed regular prompting from the guide ("turn left here . . . now"). Confidence waned when she grazed a cast-iron bollard in Pall Mall. Billed as a "familianzation tour", it took us no further west than Hyde Park Corner, included 10 minutes driving round the Barbican and stopped only at the Old Cunosity Shop where the curios proved less attractive than the diet Pepsi on offer next door. The commentary was slipshod and occasionally downright misleading. Landseer's "Monarch of the Glen" was not a reindeer and the National Liberal Club is not the Ministry of Defence. "Great way to learn a new language" the thriver told me as he handed me a pair of headphones, but the French lady behind me neither wanted to learn a new language nor hear about London and steadfastly refused her pair. The commentary was wide-ranging though marred by lapses into the benal ("On the right is Beauchamp Place with a

The timing of the commentary was problematic, often referring to sights the everyday mid-afternoon traffic had prevented us reaching or the unexpected lack of vehicles meant we had already passed. "The postal address for Apsley House is No 1, London" hardly seemed appropriate by the time we had arrived at Wilton Place. The roval blue double-decker had a

In the space of two hours, it took in the City and Southwark as well as High Street Kensington, Bayswater Road and Sloane Square. The chief complaints were the heat and the difficulty in hearing a respectable if low-key commentary from the back. The coach was clean and, for once, many of the passengers were British. We boarded the boat for Greenwich at Westminster Pler after an oppressive 20-minute wait in the sun. problem of finding a suitable dolls' house for his small daughter, Alexandra, Dr Andreas Papadakis, Editor of Architectural Design magazine, tried the toyshops and did not like what he saw. He lit on the novel plan of inviting the architects of the world to compete in designing one for her. For Stage 1 in 1981 contestants submitted drawings and intentions. The interest was amazing. A total of 260 entries was submitted. Of these 50 were selected to prepare an actual model and 20 other renowned architects were also invited to ioin the competition. The finished entry, fascinating though it is, does not always convince that all the designers had children in mind. Some patterns are very sophisticated and transform the whole idea of the traditional dolls house. They are in a tradition dating from the seventeenth century then wealthy patrician ladies in Europe assembled their pre-cious collections of miniatures in rooms with tiny, fashionable wax-doll residents.

By the eighteenth century the housing of such collections had progressed to little buildings based on fine mansions of the period: two of the most famous may be seen at the homes where were originally sited: the doll house at Nostell Priory, near Wakefield, with furniture attributed to Chippendale design: and the Baby House at Uppark, Sussex, made in about

During the Victorian period. dolls' houses assumed an even more domestic aspect. Realistic copies of actual dwellings, often done by estate carpenters, were lovingly furnished by ladies of the house with miniature watercolours, embroidered hangings, petit-point rugs and prettily dressed doll characters. This century saw the creation of two marvellous dolls' houses. When his small daughter thought she saw a fairy (in Ireland of course) Sir Nevile Wilkinson planned the amazing "Titania's Palace" at his home Ballynastragh. Open daily 12.30pm-2.30pm and 6pm-10.30pm In the interests of honest journalism it should be stressed from the start that you can't actually see the river from the Granby Restaurant's terrace since it is hemmed in by a tall, voluminous hedge. Beyond that, the Embankment Gardens and the Embankment itself out further distance between you and water. Nevertheless, it's an attractive spot for an al fresco lunch or leisurely spack (the terrace is shared by the hotel's

The Granby's main dining room is a leather-bound, bookfacsimile study and though it is efficiently air-conditioned, they seem happy for diners to spill out on to the four or five terrace tables with their Martini umbrellas, and the waiters give no hint of complaint as they clamber through the narrow French window to serve you. Don't expect to have the sweet trolley dragged out, restaurant, Granby's has the usual culinary Esperanto - beef stroganoff (£6.90), chicken Kiev (£5.75) - but branches out enterprisingly with a short cuisine minceur section. This ncludes an attractive sounding sole fillets in cider (£9.25) and the seasonally apt salad Lisa (£3.50). This entails a pate of avocado and cottage cheese, decorated with prawns, crabmeat and grapefruit on a nest of chicory leaves. While the appearance is rather monotone,

Set a few yards back the river, the pub's frontage is currently marred by the construction work ("this blasted heath"), and the splendid views across the Thames to St Paul's must be enjoyed from the confines of a small yard with picnic tables and incongruous beach umbrellas.

Nevertheless. the pub's interior is undeniably atmospheric - a maze of low-beamed it is almost possible to hear the rooms filled with "historical London" paraphernalia of varying degrees of credibility. Predictably, the Anchor is a popular stop-off on the tourist ircuit, so be prepared to find it full of leisure-suited Americans rather than pearly-coated Cock-

Salads include beef (£1.60), ham or turkey (1.20) or quiche (£1.75) with generouslyfilled, granary bread baps at 80p. The hot meals were the traditional bangers and mash (well, Smash, actually) and the equally traditional sweet and sour pork with rice (£1.60). The beer (Courage) is quite good.

East is east and west is west and the twain meet today in Harrods central hall. In the annual exhibition of china and glass the most interesting displays are of English and European porcelain which reflect such a preoccupation with oriental design that they amount to a centuries-old love affair - a sort of Crown Derby and Jain. Cyclamen

One of the most popular house plants is the cyclamen, which is not expensive to buy and, as long as it is given the right conditions, will be as good, if not better, for a number of years. Now is the time to look at the cyclamen which have been dried off in the greenhouse. They should have been turned on their sides and by now will be quite dry. Gently remove the dry dead follage attached to the grown of the comp. Knock out the pot, and make sure there is no sign of rot. Gently ease the soil away from the root of the plant, making sure you do not damage them.

You should be left with a corm with dry roots attached ready for re-potting. Use any of the solliess composts. ICI are introducing a new soilless compost later this year to be called Verdley Soil and Potting Compost. Select the smallest available pot which will take the corm and roots without cramping. This is usually the same size as before. Do not double the roots back up the pot, but it is permissible to curi them round the bottom of the pot. Water the pot and place in a shady frame or greenhouse. Keep humid and ventilate lightly. Syringe the com daily to induce growth.

Pots should flower about Christmas or early in the New Year.

Centuries of cultivation

Earlier this year, in the course of an otherwise savagely critical article on the Chelsea Flower Show, Sir Roy Strong, Director of the Victoria and Albert Museum, singled out for praise the garden sculpture of Simon Verity and The Strong Verity and what he saw as the revival of a dead art through a modern idiom. Rosemary Verrey, creator of the garden at Barnsley House in Gloucester-shire, responded by importing three works by Verity and allowing him use of her orchard as a showcase. Such action is symptomatic of Rosemary Verey's approach to garden design; she picks the best from each century and weaves each element into her wonderful eclectic garden. Rosemary Verey's feeling for design comes from sixteenth taken in at one go. and seventeenth-century gar-dening books, and her feeling for plants and planting from favourites such as Gertrade Jekyll, Vita Sackville-West and Graham Stuart Thomas, From Great use is also made of pots in which grow an abundance of hardy geraniums.

There is a fine vegetable garden which is treated in a decorative way with brick and block paths, and Mrs Verey block pains, and this verey tells me that this coming winter's project is to build some sort of elevated viewing platform so that the overall design can be

At 11.5°, it is unlikely to send anybody to sleep in the afternoon, while its crisp, appley nose and refreshing, fruity taste make it all too casy to drink.

Another light, dry white that can sit in the refrigerator for hours and not come to any great harm is Muscadet, Although this appellation controlle will never be in the top tier, there are some good examples around. Pierce Lusseaud for instance, has been one of the most worthwhile wine-makers in the region, and his "82 Château de la Gaissonniere (Peter Domimic, £3.10) is one of the best vintages he has ever made. Of course, August is by no means a month for white wines only. The glorious twelfth brings the first of the new season's grouse, and those lucky enough to be eating this bird in August will want some good red wine to so with it. I think burgundy is the best partner for grouse, and one of the cheapes and most agreeable red burgundies around is Louis Jadot's '78 Bourgogne Rouge, Reserve des Jacobins, which has had its price dramatically reduced. This plummy, pale garnet wine is a classic Pinot Noir and has a lovely rich, warm, almost liquorice-like taste that you could easily pay twice the price for (Oddbins, £3.79; Cullens. £3.50; The Market and Le Provencal shops, £3.75). Alternatively, if you prefer a less gutsy wine with game, you might like to try a new Vin de Pays de l'Ande that I tried the other day. This is the '81 Foncalien, made from the Cabernet Sauvignon grape, which has a lovely grassy smell, deep purple colour and fresh ripe taste. Few musicians have stayed as true to their essential nature over the span of a lengthy career as has Mulligan, whose present music can be traced directly to his earliest recordings of more than 30 years ago. Little Big Horn may develop one or two recent preoccupations, but it represents the very best kind of musical conservatism.

Four of its half-dozen tracks find the Multigan baritone saxophone alone with a rhythm section including, at various times, the pianists Dave Grusin and Richard Tee, the bassists Jay Leonbert and Anthony Buddy Williams and Butch and "Another Kind of Sunday" Miles. Fassbinder's strange last bow beneath an orange sun

Reiner Werner Fassbinder, the perennial world of bomosexual Wunderkind of Germany's revious, marder and theft with his talized cinema, was never the usual unfettered detail and kind of artist to make a lyrical passion. Fassbinder dignified, autumnal exit. He was declared an interest in filming found dead, aged 36, in a the book as early as 1968, when Munich apartment in June last his own career was just taking

His final film, Querelle, unveiled at the Venice festival last August, has met, moreover, with fiercely divided reactions. Directors as varied as Marcel Carné and Jean-Luc Godard have said kind things (including "a masterpiece"); many critics have snorted with ridicule or lamented Fassbinder's tumble into camp, pretentions panto-

Given the style and subject, controversy over Querelle was unavoidable. The source mat-erial is Jean Genet's novel Querelle de Brest, written in plot - an inner world governed August 11.

1947, which treats the anthor's by Genet's imagination.

Fassbinder wanted his Que-relle to be a film about Genet's novel, rather than a conventional screen transcription. He also insisted on setting the action in a deliberately artificial environment. "The external occurrence, separated from Genet's image world", Fassbinder declared, "gives us a not very interesting, more or less third-rate detective story, hardly worth our concern." His concern instead was lavished on the "subjective fantasy" within the plot – an inner world governed the reversely, Querelle enjoys the trappings of accessible cinema; international stars like Jeanne Moreau and France Jeanne Jea also insisted on setting the

Genre professional

Howard Hawks, who died in 1977, was a hard-nosed Hollywood director who regarded making films as just another job and was the last to claim any artistic pretension. Yet artist he was, not in the Ingmar Bergman sense of using his work to express a deep personal vision but in his ability to take and enrich popular forms and leave his stamp upon them. Nearly all Hawks's films were genre pictures: they just hap-pened to be among the best of their type. Think of the gangster film and you think of Scarface, the war film and Sergeant York, the screwball comedy and Bringing Up Baby; and has there ever been as good a private eye thriller as The Big Sleep?

He also made several fine Westerns and it is largely because Hawks directed it that El Dorado (today, BBC1, 7.05-2.10pm) is not just another piece of John Wayne gun-slinging with which to while away a dead Saturday evening.

When El Dorado first appeared, in 1966, it tended to be dismissed as an enjoyable if decidedly inferior version of a previous Hawks Western, Ria Brava; the tired offering of a man near the end of his career. There are certainly similarities between the two films.

In each, the basic plot is the defence of a town against outlaws, undertaken by John Wayne with the dubious help of an alcoholic (Dean Martin in Rio Bravo, Robert Mitchum here) and a toothless old gaffer (Arthur Hunnicutt succeeding Walter Brennan).

But the plot is only a framework in which to explore character and motive and it is precisely Hawke's ability to breathe new life into familiar forms that forces El Dorado to be considered in its own right, to be appreciated equally by those who know Rio Bravo down to the last frame and audiences coming to Hawks for the first time. For the latter, particularly, two more things can be said about Hawks. His constant theme (echoing his own view of his work) is the need for professionals to do their job in tough situations. People in Hawks's films are always asking "Is he good enough?"

The second point concerns
Hawks's style. At first glance, there is none: no dramatic lighting, no fancy camerawork, no fast cutting. A good director. Hawks once said, is someone who does not get in the way. Look more closely, though, and every shot works for the film. Art may be concealing art but it is art all the same.

· Such shameful subscryience to youth and overworked businessmen is bad enough at home, but to elect to continue with it on holiday smacks of masochism. Hence the decision to be selfish: to seek the sun at full blast, hotels with staff and room service - and blow the rest of them.

Spring turned to summer before we studied the brochures. All the hotels abroad we liked (or could afford) were devote but fully booked. The prospect of stand-bys and bucket-shop flights did not please; then there was the dog, for whom we could find no temporary minder at the right time. We had left it too late. The heatwave arrived and like most phlegmatic Britons, we vearned for a cooling breeze. We found it one day on a day trip on a canal, phut-phutting upstream ...

Conspiratorial glances were exchanged as they brought me, bubbles and ice and insisted I lay on the roof watching the sky. No prizes for guessing where the galley slave will be in a week's time. She has exchanged a vast converted dairy for a narrow boat, a double bed for bunks and a rocky coastline for the riverbank. And she only has herself to blame. She is also, as she writes, sending off for the brochures for remote Mediterranean islands and getting a cast-iron commitment for dogminders - for next year.

Tournament winner with a sore tooth

A hundred years and one week ago the Polish grandmaster, Simon Winawer, by beating the the last round of the third international tournament of the German Chess Federation at Nuremberg, achieved the greatest success of his tournament career. The names and scores of the competitors in this event reveal how strong it was:-Winawer 14. Blackburne 131/2 Mason 12. Berger 111/2, Bardeleben 11. Bird and Riemann 1012 Schallopp 10, Schwarz 91/2, Hruby and Weiss 9, Schottlander 814. Bier and L. Paulsen 8. W. Paulsen 614. Fritz 514. Gunsberg and Lange 5. and Leffmann 4.

An astonishing circumstance about Winawer's participation in this event is that it was almost haphazard. A kaufmann (merchant) by profession he was merely passing through Nuremberg on business at the time. I leave it to the eloquent works.

Hoffer in Chess Monthly to time.

The contemporary comment Winawer had no intention to take part in the tournament. On a journey from Hamburg to Vienna he arrived at Nuremberg, and suffering acutely from toothache, he stopped to get professional advice. When walking to the town he accidentally met Mason, who ac- witsch mention him in their companied him to a dentist. Whilst waiting for the next train to Vienna, the committee were German master, J. Schwarz, in apprised of his presence, and persuaded him to play in the tournament".

To get Winawer in true historical perspective it should be realized that Siegbert Tarrasch was playing in the general tournament at Nuremberg and in fact won it. appearing in the prize lists as Herr Tarrasch from Halle, But though Winawer lived most of his life (1838-1920) during the so-called classical age of chess, was no classicist, being rather more modern than the hypermoderns. Inventor of the system named after him in the French Defence which is almost the call sign of the hypermoderns, he was also playing the Modern Defence(1...P-Q3) some 80 odd years before it became so popular among the about his opening the defence with P-Q3 was "eccentric but hardly original". I suppose we would say nowadays "original but hardly eccentric".

Sadly, the hypermoderns give him no credit for his innovations. Neither Réti nor Nimzo-

This was the game Winawer won at Nuremberg on July 30,

The long, hard road to Wytch Farm

If Mrs Thatcher's first four years taught this Government anything about privatization, it was surely that converting simple manifesto promises into reality is a terribly frustrating. time-comsuming and complicated business.

Nowhere has the task proved more sisyphean than with the Government's plans to sell off the British Gas corporation's 50 per cent stake in Wytch Farm, the country's largest on-shore oil field. It is now more than two years since Mr David Howell, then Secretary of State for Energy, first announced the Government's intention to sell the asset. Two energy secretaries later, the process has still not been completed, notwithstanding the fact that the department's original deadline for completing the disposal was the end of the 1981/2 financial year (i.e. 16 and a bit months ago). A buyer has been found in the form of the Dorset Group, a consortium of five independent British oil companies, and the terms of the sale have, after protracted negotiations, finally been approved (by the Government at least, if not by the gas corporation. But once again, the latest deadline for tying up the sale -the middle of last month has come and gone. The betting is that it will be several weeks before the final legal and contractual issues have been settled. and Wytch Farm moves into the private sector. It is ironic that the Government's original decision to sell the asset by auction to the oil industry, rather than issue shares to the public, was taken in the belief that it would enable the whole process to be wrapped up more quickly. This calculation has proved to be startingly misguided.

Add to this the fact that British Gas has, by common consent, had much the better of the argument about the wisdom of selling off a proven revenue-earning asset during a buyer's market in oil, and it is no surprise that government minister have long since given up boasting about this particular roll-back of the State frontiers.

The price the Government will obtain for Wytch Farm - £80m as an initial payment, and £80m later, followed by further small royalty payments if production reaches certain levels - is hardly a princely sum that justifies the hours of effort that have gone into forcing through the sale the corporation's

The lessons from the exercise have proved invaluable however in preparing for future privatization.

This is why the Government is handling the proposed sale of the corporation's North Sea oil assets differently. From September 1, the assets will be owned and managed directly by the energy department until a sbare sale or oil industry auction can by arranged. This will probably take the best part of a

Handling the sale itself is common sense, but also somewhat bizarre. For it means that a non-interventionist and privatizing Government will now be actively running, on a dayto-day basis, a business that it believes it should not

Meanwhile Tricentol, Carless Capel, Clyde and the other British oil companies in the Dorset group are growing old waiting to get their hands on an asset which will play a key role in determining whether they are to prosper or not in the next few year's tougher oil climate. Who would have thought that Tricentrol would get quicker service from the Chinese, who are expected to sign an exploration deal with them in the next day or two, than they would from their own Govern-

Mr Maxwell says the forecast dividend is covered only 1.5 times on a full-taxed basis and reminds Waddington share holders that in the financial years 1981 to 1983 the dividend was halved and "then reduced to a derisory level".

Waddington has been fight ing for its independence for the past two months since a bid was launched by Norton Opax Earlier this week Norton sold its Wadddington shares for a £250,000 profit to BPPC. This per cent stake in Waddington. Mr Victor Watson, Waddington chairman, says BPCC is still trying to get his company on the cheap even with its increased Waddington will be writing to its shareholders again next week urging rejection of the BPCC offer, which initially

Brookes poised for Piccadilly

By Jeremy Warner

Kennedy Brookes, the restaurant-owning group, is poised to win the catering rights for the Trocadero development in London's Piccadilly Circus.

The project, which is expected to be confirmed shortly. will be one of the biggest ever handled by the small Unlisted Securities Market company and will require a total investment will be financed directly by the Up to 20 separete "theme" bars and catering units are due to be installed in the 2-acre site.

Two weeks ago, the group opened a £900,000 London version of Maxim's, the world famous restaurant. Chairman Mr Michael Golder says that the restaurant's banqueting bookings for the autumn and

Unit trusts soar in Australia

It was stock markets on the other side of the world which put up the best performance last month. The Australian Metals & Minerals index ended July 11. 3 per cent higher, slightly ahead of the rise recorded by the All Ordinary Index. Reflecting this jump, all but one of the industry's unit trusts specialising in Australia scored an offer price gain of 10 per cent or

Leading the contingent was Lawson Australian and Pacific with a rise of 18.3 per cent, some 2 per cent ahead of Gartmore Australian, which had previously been one of the back markers in this year's overall league table.

Much of the recent rise in Australian share prices has been attributed to renewed overseas interest in the stock market here. Investors are anticipating that the world economic recovcry will mean increased demand for the country's natural resources. Another positive factor has been the Australian Bureau of Agriculture's forecast of a major recovery in the rural sector, which has suffered badly from recent droughts.

Still overhanging the Australian metals and minerals sector is the prospect of the new Labour Government's proposed Buckmaster & Moore, stock-brokers, have warned their private clients against underestimating what the administration may have in mind."

While the Labour Government of Mr Hawke is demonstrating a much more pragmatic approach to business than was the case in Gough Whitlam's day, the administration, mindful of the vawning budget deficit, will want to exact its pound of flesh. Gold mining companies, which in the past have escaped the tax nct, could prove quite hard hit."

Another market to put up a strong performance last month was Hongkong's. The Hang Seng index notched up an 11.2 per cent gain on bullish expectations of the outcome of the recent talks between the British and Chinese govern-ments on the political future of the colony. A cut in local interest rates also belped sentiment. Britannia Hong Kong Performance mirrored this renewed optimism with an 11.6 per cent offer price rise, and Gartmore Hong Kong was 11 per cent higher.

Claim form change

E60,000 for joint holdings.

Guardian Royal Exchange has revised its motor claims form to cater for policyholders who wish to report an accident for information only. The new form includes notes in red to help the policyholder, and GRE points out that the completion of the claim form, for information only, does not affect your noclaims borus.

The changes have been made as a result of representations made by The insurance Ombudsman, who has been faced with an increasing number of complaints about insurers settling third party claims without consulting their policyholders. This results in a reducion of no-claims bonus.

Signal action

Mr John Potter, coordinator of the Signal Life Investors Action Group which represents the interests of those unfortunate investors who lost money in the collegee of Signal Life, has been talking to Mr Alex Fletcher, Minister of State for Consumer Affairs.

"The Minister is very concerned about the Signal affair and is encouraging us to proceed with our test cases against the intermediaries who sold these bonds", Mr Cotter said. Mr Potter said.

Next fandmark in the Signal affair is the meeting of the Committee of Inspection on Thursday at the offices of the liquidator, Mr Gerry Weiss, of Cork Gully. Mr Potter will be representing the interests of Investors at the meeting.

Insurance

Covering the student risk

Certain categories of people are considered bad risks as far as the insurance world is concerned - journalists, deep sea divers and actors are all viewed with a jaundiced eye. High on this list come students who are believed by the industry to be prone to motorcycle accidents, personal mishaps generally, and not least of all, a high incidence of loss of personal belongings.

As a result, students often have difficulty getting insurance cover. Barclays Bank has just come up with a new insurance package as part of its Student Survival Kiz but it looks expensive compared with the two main alternatives on the market. It is only available to students opening an account with Barclays.

The table shows cover offered by the three main contenders in this field. Barclays premium of £25.50 per annum is the highest by a long way though there is a £6 discount on the first halfyearly instalment and the premium thereafter is fixed at £25.50 for the duration of the mudent's course

Endsleigh (the student in surance broker) seems to affe the best package unless you happen to live in centra London, Liverpool or Man chester, when the Harrison Closer to home, Wall Street recorded a new peak last month.

Although Wall Street did not hold its best levels, several US and £20 a year for those livi in central London, Liverpool o Manchester. It also stipulate the smallest excess - that is the amount of any claim you have to pay out of your own pocket.

On the other hand, for £17 a year, Harrison Beaumont offers higher personal belongings cover at £1,750 than the other two and could be a better bet for the student with a lot of expensive hi-fi equipment, cameras and the like.

All three policies give cover when the student is at home during the holidays, for belong-ings in transit, and for foreign abroad will need extra in- society paying as much as 9 per surance for medical cover. All three policies cover loss by fire and theft and there is no need for the thief to have made forcible entry (common requirement on general household policies). There is also no exclusion for "multiple occupancy tenancies". A lot of students have been caught out in the past with general household policies which do not pay up if the accommodation is shared with friends.

Endsleigh looks the best bet all round and has a couple of useful additional features – cover for misuse of credit cards and £500 cover if the student incurs additional expenses (such as extra rent) as a result of an accident.

Theft can be a real problem among students when flats are shared and large parties where the guests are not always known to the host are commonplace insurance is a must.

Barclays insurance is available through any branch of the bank when you open an account. Cultivating new business ventures

From little acorns, as they say, mighty oaks will grow. But Ms Marion McLaren of Collier Street village in Kent is hoping that the pots and plants in her new greenhouses will sprout the street when Spenny Lage profits when Spenny Lane Nurseries opens for business shortly, couriesy of the Government's new Enterprise Allowance Scheme.

The scheme has been run for the past year on a pilot basis in several parts of the country and went national this week. It is designed to help the unemploy-ment set up in business on their own. Those with a place on the scheme are paid £40 a week for the first year. And Ms Mcbaren was one of the first at her local Jobcentre in Maidstone on

"Living out in the country, starting a nursery seemed a sensible thing to do as I have quite a bit of land attached to my house", she says. "And I could work from home, which is an advantage when you have young children. Over the past few weeks I have been busy building-up stocks of bedding plants and organizing the greenhouses in the hope that I can sign-on the scheme.

To qualify for the Enterprise Allowance Scheme, you have to fulfil a number of conditions. You must be on unemployment or supplementary benefit when you apply, and have been out of work or under notice of redundancy for 13 weeks. You musy show you have £1,000 to keeping and all the other things

The number of places available in a particular area depends on the level of unemployment Pilot schemes that have been running for the past year indicate that the EAS should be real success. Mr Barry Phillips, the organizer in Ms McLaren's area, says. The McLaren's area, says: pilot scheme we had in the Medway Towns last year had fall-out rate of between 13 and 16 per cent - much lower than the normal failure rate for new businesses. Officials do not sit in judgment on the commercial viability of a venture. It's first come, first served for those who qualify.

Certain kinds of businesses such as or gambling, anything religious or political, are banned from the scheme. But a Kiss-O-Gram service qualified. Mr Phillips said: "Most of the businesses were more mundane. We had people like blacksmiths starting-up in business in the villages again and quite a lot of people with a traditional craft like furniture-making or renovation signed-on." Anyone, interested in the Enterprise Allowance Scheme should get in touch with their nearest Job centre as soon as

Rubber price's rapid rise sets a market poser

After languishing in the doldrums for nearly two years. rubber is bouncing back. In-deed, the advance in the price over the past six months has been so rapid as to bring it within striking distance of the point at which the buffer stock manager must sell under the International Rubber Agree-

Whether that will happen is a poser for the market, not least because the manager's stock of 270,000 tonnes could have a depressing effect.-

The market is normally quiet at this time of year. But in the at this time of year. But in the last two months the spot London Price of RSS 1 has gone up by 10p a kilogramme to almost 83p. The September price is around 1p more. This means that rubber is over the "may self" level of 240 Malaysian cents a kilogramme sian cents a kilogramme.

The buffer stock manager has indicated that he might sell half way between the "may sell" price and the "must self" price

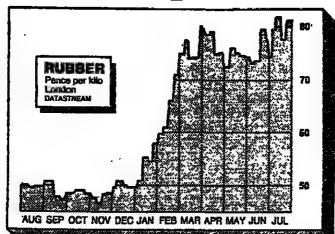

Not only has the market's capacity to absorb selling from the stockpile improved; senti-ment has also been considerably cheered by the thought that a buyer may be waiting in the wings in the American strategic stockpile, which recently said that it wanted a big increase in its rubber holdings.

Many market experts view this cautiously since the stockpile will have to get the funds from Congress, and this is easier said than done. But an interesting new light has been cast on the situation by the floating of the idea by Datuk Paul Leong, Malaysia's Primary Industries Minister, that buffer stock rubber could be swapped for some of the American tin with which the stockpile is oversupplied. Malaysia, which also dominates tin, would be pre-pared to hold this American tin.

The key to the recovery which has seen the rubber price rise 50 per cent since the beginning of the year is higher vehicle production. About 70 per cent of rubber goes into yres. Thus demand from the United States has been substantially better in recent months.

Japanese and Eastern European offtake is also well up. China has also further increased

The rush of US money into British blue chips is good business for Morgan Guaranty, but has caused administrative headaches. But things are now happening so fast that it had to report a lead from 12 to 17 per cent in holdings to Dunlop in one go. Now it is trying to tighten up so

Tough first game for Kent side

By John Clemison

Kent Invicta, the Maidstone based Rugby League side, open their second division season against Cardiff City on Sunday, August 21

(3 p.m.).
The Rugby League's newest team, could hardly have wanted a tougher start to their first season, for Cardiff, who are expected to challenge strongly for the title, scored a convincing victory over Fulham, the second division champions, at Stamford Bridge in their last Match

On the occasion, it was Cardiff's forward strength that told, and that suggests that Kent's newly as-sembled pack will face a stern examination in their first match. Fulham begin their second attempt to hold on to a place in the first division a week later on August

They were learn from his caddle that it trusty one-iron with a seven-iron to six feet behind the flagstick on the 390-yard sixteenth. He was surprised to learn from his caddle that he had to played by Barry Lane (Downshire) nd Bryan Lewis (Panshanger) who comprehensively detached them-selves from the rest of the field with totals of 287 - seven over par - and 288 respectively. Lane received £1.000, only £250 more than Lewis, but he also won a place in the world assistants' championship in Florida in December.

Lane was inspired by an unexpected birdie at the 13th, in the wake of shots dropped at the two previous holes. He drove a one-iron into the trees and, from an apparently unplayable lie, somehow managed to hack the ball out. Then from 80 yards, he hit a fine wedge shot which would have provided a par four had the ball not run into

"From that moment, I felt fine." he said later. He hit a one-iron and wedge to the 324-yard fourteenth and holed from 15 feet; reached the 494-yard 15th with a one-iron and a

Look-alike triumph for Elvis

From Mitchell Platts

Glenn Ralph bears a striking resemblance to Elvis Presley and to be brutally honest, it is his rock star features rather than his golfing attributes for which he is immediatriy known on the circuit. That was until yesterday, when on the wind-swept seaside links of Kennemer, he discovered a repertoire of shots quite out of character to take a stranglehold on the £80,000 Dutch Open, sponsored by KLM. His second round of 65 equalled the course record and gave the 27-year-old from Bognor Regis a halfway total of 131, 13 under per.

Ralph has been a professional for ten years. In that time, apart from a short flirtation with the top of the leaderboard in the Open champion-ship at Muirfield three years ago, he has spent his life in the backwaters has spent his life in the backwaters of the game. He has never managed a top 20 finish, never won a four figure cheque and this season he is No 187 in the European official money list – with £347. Life has been made bearable because of the generous sponsorship he receives from the Withans Motor Company of Banstead, and the devotion of his girlfriend Denise, to whom he plans to propose should he capture this championship.

Will Ralph find himself walking up the isle in the near future? There tip the isle in the near future? There can be little doubt that, in spite of his four stroke lead over the Australian Wayne Grady (70), it will not be an easy task to win. It is not hard to sprinkle shots away on this course; Sandy Lyle twice strayed a few feet from the fairways, and was negalized with molayable lies. With penalized with unplayable lies. With a score of 77 for a total of 148, be ziled to best the guillotine.

To his credit, Ralph stayed on the To his credit, Ralph stayed on the straight and narrow all the way round the 6,834 yard course, on which the grass had been finally trimmed down to a respectable length, and he gathered seven birdies and one eagle. There was much to admire about his game. The six-son that he drilled into ten feet for his eagle at the 900 yard sixth; the drive and two-iron with which he reached the long eleventh; then, in a fine finish, the wedge that he struck from a 121 yards at the eighteenth, the bull landed 15 inches from the cup and he joyously tapped frighteenth, the ball lanceur is support from the cup and he joyously tapped

Grady, who led after a first round of 65, put together a tidy score and he is the obvious threat to Ralph. Two shots farther back, on 137, are the defending champion Paul Way, who followed a first-round 68 with a 69, and the Australian Vaughan

One rule for the poor bends ruling imposed on the rich

A lamentable comment here on Thursday by Pierre Desriaux, the technical delegate of the Inter-national Amateur Athletic Federmational Amateur Athletic Federation throws into question just how serious the IAAF, are in wanting genuise world championships as opposed to a political commercial jamboree little different from the increasingly discredited Olympics. It is already being suggested, and not without reason, that the success of these innerenal world champion-not without reason, that the success of these inaugural world championships, starting tomorrow, could threaten the existence in the traditional form of the Olympics, which hitherto have been the world championships of athletics, the major sport of the Games.

Yet, instead of becoming more selective, the Olympics are moving even further towards the arena of It's a Knockout, with tennis and synchronised swimming. Can darts be far behind?

Confirming on Thursday that be far behind?

Confirming on Thursday that Steve Ovett, the Olympic 800 metres champion, would not be permitted to replace Sebastian Coe in that event, starting tomorrow, Dasriaux said this decision was not inconsistent - would you believe it? have not yet named the event in which their athletes are to be entered and would not indeed do so

"The smaller countries have to be looked after", said Dasriaux, rather as the headmistress at a kindergar-ten would announce that Jennifer will, after all, be permitted to take part in the egg-and-spoon race on sports day, even though she has been absent for most of the term with measles. Sentiment, at this level, has no part in championships. Athletics is now professional, at the instigation of the IAAF, in all but name. If these are world championships for the benefit of athletes rather than officials, which has to be questioned, then they must be run as a professional ship. That means no stowaways, who are here simply as appeasement to political influence in the Third World and elsewhere. You do not find grace-and-favour entries lining up on the grid in Formula One events at Monaco or over half of the men's singles entries at Wimbledon, that is because they are there on merit, which is how it are there on merit, which is how it ought to be.

The imaginal world champion-ships have already lost some of their credibility by excluding many of the top 10 in the world in their particular events. If the Americans have five of the fastest 10 sprinters - more like eight as it happens - and Britain five of the top 1,500 metres runners, and the Soviet Union and Finland the majority of the best

Samaranch not at all alarmed

Helsinki (AP)- Juan Antonio Samaranch yesterday dismissed suggestions that the world championships, starting here tomorrow, may lessen the importance of the Olympic Games. The Spanish President of the International Olympic Committee said at a Press nce: "We regard these onships as one of the most important sports events in the world. They will not undermine the importance of the Olympic Games. on the contrary, I think the Olympics will become more important than ever, because track and field will be more important."

The absurdity of the recent British selection controversies in the 800 and 1,500 - and the fact that Britain may now be running one short in both if Graham Williamson falls by the wayside like Coe -would be eliminated by really severe qualifying performances, the achievement of which automatically entitles the athlete to a place in the championships.

World championships should not be about charity, and any country found to have falsified the qualifying performance of an athlete - there are more fiddles going on here than at the Social Security office - should be banned from Silverstone, and, if Australians and at the next championships. This is an americans traditionally constitute and authority against the second and appropriate the second and appropria entering a competitor in that event event of the year, with competitors such as Carl Lewis, Steve Cram, Jurgen Hingsen, Evelyn Ashford, and May Decker striving for sporting immortality. Yet, before the first event has begun, it is according to the first firs apparent that far more vigorous discipline is required in two important areas spart from qualifying performances: drug abuse and physical foul play in lane-free track

We cannot judge just what influence on the championships illegal drugs will have, though it is probable that it will be greater in the women's events than in the men's due to the recent development in the use of testosterone, the male hormone. What is certain is that until the IAAF introduce computsory random testing - not least in the United States, where abuse it rife - on every country's athletes by an independent source. In any month of the year, the sport will continue to be corrupted and the athletes exploited.

With ferociously high standard probable in both the 800 and 1,500 metres, it will be interesting to see whether the authorities are prepared to take the ultimate and only sanction of disqualification against those who gain tactical advantage by blatant use of the arms. This increasing practice was evident in the Moscow Olympics; it has hammer and javelin throwers, then they should all be here, on the basis of an equivalent to the ATP ranking computer in tennis.

The absurdity of the recent

Ron Clarke, the former recordbreaker from Australia, who never won a major championship gold medal, is one of those appalled by contemporary tactics. He says: "it astonishes me these days in sport that we deprecate those who play within the rules and elevate the rough and tough characters like lan Botham, Harvey Smith, John McEnroe and Ian Chappell, Why don't we make people stick to the rules? Some athletes seem to have no consideration for others. When Oven pulled up in the AAA 800 final at Crystal Palace, he made no attempt to pull off the track, and obstructed McGeorge behind him. I

Mrs Smith can come of age From Pat Butcher, Helsinki

The first world championships begin here tomorrow with a forecast of good weather, the blessing of a former Helsinki favourite, Emil Zalopek, and the promise of great things from a new one, Carl Lewis. Above all, it is certain this will be

The good weather, however, will not necessarily be welcomed by the women marathon runners. Joyce Smith, the Briton who at 45 is a prospect for a medal has reason to fear the temperatures of 70°F and hotter that are expected.

In similar conditions in Miami three years ago, the red-headed Mrs Smith passed out in the last mile of the marathon. But that experience, and all the rest she has accrued in two decades as a top class distance runner, will serve her well in only the second women's marathon in a major championship, the first having been held in the European onships in Athens last year.

of recent speed training times which are superior to those she was recording as a 1,500 metres international runner over 10 years ago. All of this augurs well for Mrs Smith if there is any fattering from

Ma Biche to thwart A Swiss champion

From Jenny MacArthur

The Swiss continued their domination of European show jumping when they won the Aga Khan Trophy, Ireland's Nations Cup, at the Dublin Horse Show yesterday. Ireland finished a close second with the Germans third. Britain, last year's winners, suffered the indignity of finishing last of the

The winners, ficiding the four riders who won the team gold medal in last week's European champien-ships at Hickstead, are now at the head of the league for the President's Cup, for which the six best Nations' Cup results coun'. Britin are in second place, a point chind, it is only the fourth time the Swiss have won the Age Khan trophy, the last occasion being in 1930, when they were allowed to keep the Cup.

Yesterday's course was comparatively easy for a Nations' Cup event. David Broome said it was the smallest he had ever seen admittedly he did not actually leve to jump it. The British might have fared better if it was bigger. At it was, Harvey Smith on Sango Olympic Video had the only clear first round. Michael Whitaher on Amanda and his brother John on Ryan's Son both had one ferce down and Pam Dunning, whose handbag was storen on Friday, added to her misfortunes with a disastrous first round on Fearless, finishing on 17 faults. No one clie had more than one fence down in the first round, although the tight time (90 seconds) caused many time

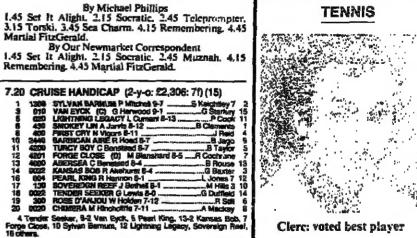

-At the end of the round the Swiss were ahead, with no faults, followed by Ireland on a quarter of a fault, with Italy, the rank outsiders ther i faults and Britain were last on eight. for the second round - a new rule now allows this, Britain however, could do little better. v ib Michael Whitzker again having a fence down and Pam Dunning collecting eight faults.

It soon developed into a harrisbetween the Irish, jumping in mount of a large and vociferous from crowd, and the Swiss, Poth Light had two clear rounds from 18717 Hrs. three riders so it all hinged on the fourth to go for trained, Eddie Macken on Carrolls F.c. 2! Linu. who had been responsible for ireland's crucial quarter fault in the first round.

With the crowd jumping every ence with them, the pressure was intense, and they hit the second part of the double. These four faults meant that the Swiss did not need a score from their last rider. Clerc: voted best player

Clerc's run ended by

Indianapolis (AFP and Reuter) – Argentina's Jose Luis Clere dramati-cally withdrew from the United States clay court championships here only hours after being named player of the month by tennis writers.

The 24-year-old player had been on course for his feurth successive tournament title after winning 15 matches in a row since his first round defeat at Wimbledon. But Clere astonished spectators by pulling out of his third mund match with Roberto Arguello, of the Listed States when he lost the first with Roberto Arguello, of the United States, when he lost the first set 6-1. He said later he had a heavy cold and was running a temperature. Clere was second seed in the championships and his chances had looked good since the climination of the top seed José Higueras, of Spain by the American toenager, Jimmy Brown, in the first round.

The women's top seed, Andrea Temesvari, of Hengary, and the defending champion, Virginia Russei, of Romania, the fourth seed, won straight set victories to advance to a semi-final meeting. In the other semi-final, the second seed. Kathy Zing Garrison, the third seed, for the first time.

The 17-year-old Miss Temesvari won 10 of the last 12 games to overpower eighth seeded American.
Kathy Horvath. 6-3. 6-1. Miss Temesvari, winner of this year's Italian Open, lost her service for the first time in the tournament in the fourth game of the first ser but in her final six service games she had three love games and lost only four points. Miss Ruzici had a slightly tougher match against the finh seed Bonnie Gadusek, of the United States, in a repeat of last year's semi-tital as site WOD 7-5.6-1.

Carson will also be fancying his chances of winning the Dominion Insurance Anniversary Stakes on Speedwell, a well bred newcomer from Dick Hern's stable, who is said to be well named. By all accounts she has inherited plenty of speed from her dam, the Town Crier mare Bluebell. In this instance, I prefer On Oath, a colt by Monsanto out of that exceptionally fast filly Cry Of Truth, who was able enough to win the Cheveley Park

On Oath is trained by Bruce Hobbs and his stable jockey, Geoff Baxter, won the South Coast Stakes at Lingfield with good chance of doing so again, this time with last year's St Leger runner-up Zilos, who was far from disgraced in the Jockey Club Stakes, his only race this his best, ought not to be up to

Prince of Princes (7.50) and Little Mercy (8.20) are other likely winners at Lingfield. "You can tip her to win her next race too; she's in tremendous form at the moment." Those were John Winter's words after Little Mercy had won at 7-1 at Newmarket eight days ago. So ignore her in the Holiday Handicap at your peril.

As for Prince of Princes, he ran really well behind Morgan's Choice at Ascot recently and Morgan's Choice promptly went on to take the Goodwood

Stakes the following week.
What with the Kiwi Stakes; the London-Wellington Handicap; the Tauranga Selling Handicap and the Air New Zealand Handicap, there will definitely be a scent form the southern bemisphere in the air at Newmarket this afternoon. The last-named is the most valuable race there an it may go to Thorndown, who beat Wiveton at Sandown last month.

Geoff Baxter rides Zilos

resents the current classic crop but he will be meeting Thorndown on nearly a stone worse terms than he would if this were weight for age handicap and that could prove too much.

At his best, Riberetto looks the most leniently-treated runner in the field, bearing in mind that he did win the Derby Trial at Lingfield two years ago. But a lot of water has passed under the bridge in the meantime and in this instance not only Thorndown but also Balladier, Regal Steel and Jupiter Island have better form to their name. Jupiter Island has been the Diamond Day as being a correct picture of his ability. All the more so as he carried the full weight of his stable's confidence yesterday dismissed his appeal that day and started favourite. So it seems only fair to give him to be forfeited. The ban came the benefit of the doubt in the after his mount, Air Distingue Kiwi Stakes. Having finished second to Chapel Cottage in the Cherry

Hinton Stakes on the course at the July meeting, albeit four lengths adrift. Nopbe will have a host of followers in the Sweet Solera Stakes. Yet I wonder whether she will manage to give 8lb to the very easy Salisbury winner Triagonal, who will be meeting Out Of Shot on much more favourable terms than when they clashed at Sandown. where Out Of Shot won by two

Foster's genuine pace and cool temperament can take him to the top

A year ago he shuffled into Chelmsford cricket ground, an anonymous spectator, noticed only because he was wearing a plaster cast. His back was broken and a promising career scemed to be over, at the age of 20. Today he strides into that same ground recognized by everyone as perhaps the brightest fast bowling prospect English cricket has produced for

The world of Neil Foster has been transformed because he gambled on a special operation to mend his back which involved the insertion of two six-inch stainless steel plates. They have kept the vertebrae rigid while the broken bones are healing. He has been able to bowl at full pace with no ill effects, and with astonishing results. He has taken 50 firstclass wickets, bowled magnificently in the Benson and Hedges Cup final at Lord's and is on the verge of the England team. All in three months.

"I sometimes think it's all a dream and I'm going to wake up." Foster said. I was very tentative when I started the scason, although I'd trained hard and was very fit. But ! what's amazed me is that apart from a little stiffness after a hard day in the field I have had no reaction. Apart from a little swelling I get no pain.

The scars look sore and red and I oinly show them to the doctor!

The operation has been judged a total success and the steel plates will be removed at the end of the season.

"It'll be a relief not to be called 'the man of steel' any more. I just hope I can take as wickets without the

"I was surprised how quick he was when I first faced him", Denness said. "His pace is deceptive. But what always impressed me most was his action - it's flowing and fluent. He also has the great asset of bowling close to the stumps and he can move the ball into the batsman and away.

"We haven't rushed him, wanting him to complete his comeback is quite unbeliev-

His bowling in the Benson and Hedges final proved the point. His three wickets for 26 in 11 overs and his magnificent run-out of Mike Gatting should have won Essex the trophy.

MOTOR CYCLING

Spencer hopes to clinch world championship

Anderstorp, Sweden, (reuter) -reddie Spencer, the United States of America, could secure the world motorcycle championship in his first full season on Smday by winning the Swedish 500cc grand prix.

Spencer, a 21 year-old from Louisians who lives up to his nickname "Fast Freddie", leads the championship from Kenny Roberts, his more experience compatriot, by two points. With only two events left, a victory worth 15 points would give Spencer an unassailable lead – assuming Roberts finishes out of the points rankings.

That is unlikely to happen, however, Roberts, seeking his fourth world championship, is in brilliant form, having won five grands prix in recent weeks to cut back Spencer's early season lead. And the 31 year-old. Roberts, who won the title between 1978 and 1980, wants to win the championship once more If Spencer is unable to secure the title on Sunday, all will hinge on the final round of the championship at San Marino on September 4.

Letter from Budapest

Blowing the whistle on a football scandal

The heat which weighs on the limbs as heavily as gabardine has almost smo-thered the life of Budapest. But there is still enough righteous zeal for citizens to sit in cales and buses and argue the pros and cons of a bizarre gootball corruption scandal smacking of high farce, low deals and pro-fessional fouls.

This week 43 members and beneficiaries of a crime syndi-cate went on trial in Szekszard cate went on trial in Szekszard in: southern Hungary. Next week dozens more will face a court in Budapest for membership of another syndicate accused of rigging the country's football pools.

This is one of the biggest corruption rackets to be exposed in Eastern Europe: well over 200 people are well over 200 people are involved, including 196 foot-ball players, a number of allegedly bent referees, team managers and coaches as well as ex-players, car dealers and pillars of Hungarian mercantile respectability.

Hungary is football mad, but unfortunately not football talented. In the summer months there are no first division matches but the Toto the pools system - has to be kept alive to feed the national hunger for soccer and gam-bling. So the focus shifts to small local teams of indifferent quality.

Six million pools coupons a week are filled out by the Hungarians at five forints a fling which means 30 million forints (about £500,000) rests on the outcome of matches: that would not look out of place on a British village common.

Last summer two crime syndicates, one based in Budapest, decided to exploit the situation. Obtaining advance copies of match fixtures each syndicate - run by an illegal brains trust - would sit down and decide which matches to buy.

in an average week the syndicates would buy 10 matches out of 40 but sway the outcome of another three. That was sufficient to make a killing - after a couple of

Syndicate members would travel to the chosen regions and bribe people to throw the match. In some towns it was sufficient to bribe the goal-keeper, in others three or four players. Usually the referee had to be bribed as well. A typically Hungarian com-plication was that the two syndicates were not in collusion. So some teams found themselves bribed twice over. Fans can remember ludicrous scenes with players throwing themselves down in agony as soon as they had an opportunity to score, or referees declaring an offside violation if a goal was accidentally

The affair came to light when Toto officials - who were not in on the deal of winning entries.

Not surprisingly, the six million orthodox pools gam-blers felt cheated and the talk has still not died down:

Two enterprising Hunga rian journalists - Andras Lakatos and Zsuzsa Lang wrote and published a book within two months of the scandal, this in a country with no record of fast book production. The book sold 150,000 copies in a week. The book, based on some of the main defendants facing trial lists exactly what bribes were paid to what team. About half a million forints in bribes was invested by the two

Although the public - or at least the male half since women seem to regard it as the inevitable outcome of an irrational passion - is incensed, fellow footballers take a more legient view of their colleagues' conduct. Footbal-lers are paid too little, they say: of course corruption is inevitable. The nation's top footballers have stayed relatively immune from the scandal, but the Football Federation clearly suspects that not everything is as clean as it might be even in the towering heights of the game,

The Daily Mail says the horrifying communal violence in Sri Lanka belongs to a sadly familiar pattern. Contrary to the impression given by films like Gandhi the end of the British empire meant the end of protection for millions of people belonging to minority racial groups. Every day which passes shows more clearly that we have reason for pride, not shame, at the role we once played.

pride, not shame, at the role we once played.

The Labour right's revulsion at the prospect of the "nightmare ticket" of Neil Kinnock as leader and Milchael Meacher as deputy has given some grim actisfaction to the Gang of Four the Daily Express says. They said years ago the left's advance was too fair gone to resist and they were roundly jeered at by their former colleagues who are now seeing the light. seeing the light.
